INTRODUCTION

The foreign capital market has a very wide range of activities. Foreign market participants act in a conflict of interests. The countries of the world have a lot of experience in international integration and enter each new market as a result of strong scientific studies. Every investor, owner of capital invests his capital in the market with the help of powerful analysts. The relevance of the topic is that it is necessary to approach the attraction of international capital at the level of the country's policy. It is important for the state to create legal foundations and ensure its implementation. Among the foreign capital, it is the effectiveness of Eurobonds, the fact that they enable the investor to avoid taxes, provide the issuer with long-term investments, and do not impose many obligations, which is the reason for their use in circulation.

Today, it is impossible to implement innovative processes at a modern level and rapidly develop the national economy without intensively attracting foreign investment.

The volume of foreign investments is one of the indicators describing the level of integration of the country into the world community and depends on the attractiveness of the investment object. Foreign investment is the export of business capital to host countries.

ANALYSIS OF THE TOPIC

Scientific works, scientific works of specialists and candidates of sciences who have conducted studies on the directions of attracting foreign capital.

Foreign scientists V.N. Sherbakov, K.V. Baldin - Investment attractiveness

RESEARCH METHODOLOGY

Scientifically based methods were used for detailed analysis of the studied topic, conclusions and suggestions. Generalization, grouping, analysis, forecasting were carried out.

ANALYSIS AND RESULTS:

The presence of directions for attracting foreign capital classifies the level of international integration of the country. Acceptance of foreign investments, the conditions for its attraction are a factor that characterizes investment activity and serve to further develop foreign economic relations. Investment attractiveness is determined by investment entities depending on the general investment environment in the country, conditions of foreign economic activity, including legal and customs conditions. Each region has its own system of prices for resources, tax policy and legal framework, different levels of development of the industry, and, accordingly, there are differences in the profitability of investment entities and objects. Import and export transactions in terms of capital movements are also related to political stability and the level of trade in the international market.

When investing in bonds, investors can focus on both yield and coupon yield. In the first case, a necessary condition for obtaining income is a sufficient level of liquidity, which is not always found in the debt market. Therefore, investors often choose the second option - receiving coupon income. The regularity of its payments determines the protection function of bonds. Eurobonds have almost the same properties as ordinary bonds, but their nature is slightly different.

Eurobonds are issued in a foreign currency for the issuer, are placed outside their country and are subject to foreign laws. The most popular exchanges for placing Eurobonds are European exchanges. Thus, in 2012, the Luxembourg Stock Exchange itself accounted for a little more than 40% of all circulating Eurobonds, while 96.6% of foreign issuers were located on the 5 most popular trading platforms. In particular, the Luxembourg and Irish exchanges are popular among issuers due to lower underwriting and issuance costs and more attractive tax rates.<sup>1</sup> As a rule, only large and reliable borrowers have access to the international platform, which is an additional factor of investor protection.

If a company or even a country does not have enough funds for development, they want to borrow money. For this, the issuer (and it can be a state, company, bank, etc.) usually issues bonds or Eurobonds, sells them to investors, takes money from them and solves its problems.

<sup>c</sup> Local currency bonds issued by non-residents, ie bonds denominated in the specified currency and issued by non-residents.

The issuer (borrower) periodically pays pre-announced interest (coupon income) to the investor for the use of funds and returns the entire loan amount (the face value of the bond) at the end of the guarantee period. Eurobonds earn as follows:

■ Coupon payments. A coupon is a percentage of the face value that the issuer pays to the bondholder. To receive such payments, it is enough to buy a Eurobond and hold it. The bigger and more popular the company, the lower the interest rates it offers. Less well-known companies with lower ratings, on the other hand, attract investors with higher coupon payments. Government bonds with the lowest coupon rate are the most reliable.

- Eurobond price changes. The policy is to buy a Eurobond at a price below par and sell it at a higher price. It should be noted that it will not be possible to make a large profit, because the market price does not differ from the nominal value. Here, the duration of the Eurobond has a significant impact on the income. The longer the term of the paper, the higher it will be.

- Growth of the exchange rate. If the soum falls, you can profitably sell securities and convert the received currency into soum. The resulting difference will be your profit.

CONCLUSION

In short, in order to achieve positive results in attracting foreign capital, it is necessary to improve this system, to study international experience in depth, to support investment projects of economic entities, to take a positive approach to their implementation, and to provide practical assistance. Proper use of foreign capital flows ensures their reinvestment. This, in turn, increases the amount of value created. We must not forget that Eurobonds, which are in high demand in the international capital market, are one of the most active types of investment.
